TOM: So if you have a block heater, great. But, regardless, start the car and just drive away. Unless it's colder than 10 or 15 degrees out, just driving gently for the first couple of minutes is the best way to warm up your engine. If it's bitter cold out or if the car stalls when you put it into drive, you can warm it up for a minute or so. But warming it up any longer than that is a waste.

Once Upon a Time in the West
1968. Charles Bronson, Henry Fonda,
Claudia Cardinale, Jason Robards; dir.
Sergio Leone, m. Ennio Morricone. First widescreen release of the director's cut of Leone's postmodern masterpiece—a summation of his work, a genre, a legend, a national philosophy and an artform.

RAY: Other folks think it's a good idea to just sit in the driveway with the motor running for five minutes. That's also a bad idea. It wastes gas, adds to pollution and doesn't do the engine any good. The engine warms up most efficiently while it's being driven.
