ING OFFICER
IND.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Troop exercises during nuclear bomb tests in the 1950s were designed to convince soldiers their fear of radiation was irrational and to give them "an emotional vaccination," newly declassified Pentagon records show.

"top secret." Meiling recommended putting combat troops 12 miles from ground zero and then moving them closer after the explosion. Some troops later were placed just 2,000 yards from ground zero. A June 3, 1952, memo suggested placing troops only 800 yards away.
